Note :

- Wherever the visarga pronunciations are written as (kh-ख़) or (ph-फ़), they aren't actually (kh-ख़) or (ph-फ़), they are just read as (kh-ख) or (ph-फ).
- Alphabet placed prior to a joint alphabet should always be pronounced with a little stress(aaghat). It's marked with symbol ' ' over all the alphabets which are needed to be pronounced stressfully. For proper pronunciations, below every shlok, letters with Aaghaat are mentioned in purple. They aren't meant to be read twice but are to be joint together and stressed to have a perfect Aaghaat pronunciation.
- If any vyanjana(consonant) is combined with a swara then it is not a joint alphabet, thus aaghat is not put on the alphabet prior to it. Example - 'f()' is a swara thus in 'visrjāmyaham', 'sri(l)' = sa(l~)+f() so we will not put aaghat on 'vi' before 'sri'. Before joint letter we put stress(aaghat) only on swara not on vyanjana(consonant) or anuswara. like in 'vasudeva(ṣ) vrajapriya(m)', even though 'vra' is a joint alphabet we will not put stress (aaghat) on the alphabet prior to it due to anuswara on it.
- There are some exceptions to aghat rules; stress is not given if the same consonant occurs twice, if the joined letter is made up of 3 letters, in the presence of Ra or Ha sounds, etc. Place the stress only where it is indicated.
